Report on LGTB people murdered in Honduras since June 2009

The Coup d’état and the followed background situation

On June 28, 2009, soldiers from the armed forces invaded the Presidential House and kidnapped the Constitutional President of Honduras, Mr. Manuel Zelaya Rosales. The capture of the president took place without the presentation of the corresponding court order. Immediately afterward he was transferred to an air base and then taken to Costa Rica, according to testimony taken from the President himself, by means of an airplane that took off at 6:10 am from Honduras.

The attack on the Presidential House was carried out using violence against the goods and occupants of the house. The facts described were reported by members of the guard of the overthrown Constitutional President, as well as by relatives of the President who were present in the Presidential House on the day of the coup.

After de coup, the following human rights violations were reported¹: unlawful killings by members of the police and government agents; arbitrary and summary killings committed by vigilantes and former members of the security forces; harsh prison conditions; violence against detainees, and corruption and impunity within the security forces; lengthy pretrial detention and failure to provide due process of law; arbitrary detention and disproportionate use of force by security forces after the June coup; politicization, corruption, and institutional weakness of the judiciary; erosion of press freedom; corruption in the legislative and executive branches; limitations on freedom of movement and association; government restrictions on recognition of some nongovernmental organizations (NGOs); violence and discrimination against women; child prostitution and abuse; trafficking in persons; discrimination against indigenous communities; violence and discrimination against persons based on sexual orientation; ineffective enforcement of labor laws; and child labor. During the political crisis following the June coup, demonstrations occurred throughout the country. Curfews were arbitrarily implemented during which security forces employed disproportionate use of force, resulting in some cases of loss of life and acts of vandalism by protestors. The “de facto” regime also limited freedom of assembly and restricted freedom of the press. Most notably, on July 1, September 26, and October 5, 2009 the de facto regime enacted decrees that suspended the constitution during curfew hours and placed substantial restrictions on freedom of expression, assembly, and association.

On January 27, 2010, Mr. Porfirio Lobo Sosa was sworn in as President of Honduras, following elections held on November 29, 2009, in which mayors, members of municipal councils and deputies were also elected. Since the inauguration of President Porfirio Lobo, there have been new acts of violence and murders against journalists, human rights defenders, and political activists and other vulnerable communities, among them lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people.

All Hondurans, regardless of sexual orientation or gender identity, have been subjected to increased violence and have received little protection from authorities; however, LGBT people been particularly vulnerable to attacks and murders. Impunity nationwide has created this deadly spike in violence.

This report documents 33 such murders. While some of these attacks are clearly based on sexual orientation and gender identity, available evidence—including explicit threats—suggest that many were politically motivated.

Actions and Reports of International Organizations

Organization of American States
On July 4, 2009, the OAS General Assembly held a special session where it approved resolution AG/RES.2 (XXXVII-E/09) in which it decided to suspend the Honduran State from the exercise of its right to participate in the OAS. In that same resolution the General Assembly resolved “to reaffirm that the Republic of Honduras must continue to fulfill its obligations as a member of the Organization, in particular with regard to human rights; and to urge the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights to continue to take all necessary measures to protect and defend human rights and fundamental freedoms in Honduras.”

Inter-American Commission of Human Rights (IACHR)

- In keeping with its obligations to promote and protect human rights and given the hundreds of complaints it had received of serious violations of the right to life and the right to humane treatment, that same day, June 28, 2009, the Commission granted precautionary measures to safeguard the lives of hundreds of persons as a consequence of the coup d’état. It requested information on the risk that certain persons faced; it also requested information pursuant to Article 41 of the American Convention on Human Rights and Article XIV of the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons. The Commission issued several press releases and on June 30, it filed a request seeking an urgent visit to Honduras.

- The IACHR conducted its in loco visit from August 17 to 21, 2009. Along with the loss of institutional legitimacy brought about by the coup d’état, during its visit the Commission confirmed that serious human rights violations had been committed, including the killing of at least seven people, an arbitrary declaration of a state of emergency, disproportionate use of force against public demonstrations, criminalization of public protest, arbitrary detention of thousands of persons, cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, poor detention conditions, militarization of Honduran territory, an increase in incidents of racial discrimination, violations of women’s rights, and severe and arbitrary restrictions on the right to freedom of expression. The Commission also established that judicial remedies were ineffective in protecting human rights in Honduras. On August 21, 2009, the IACHR publicly announced its preliminary observations on the visit in press release 60/09.

- Subsequent to the August 2009 visit and in view of the information it had received concerning serious events occurring in Honduras, on September 23 and 29, 2009, the IACHR asked the State if it could conduct another visit. However, it did not receive a reply.

- On February 3, 2010, the IACHR issued press release 14/10 in which it expressed its concern with respect to the ambiguity of the Amnesty Decree approved by the National Congress of Honduras on January 26, 2010. Although the text made provision for certain exceptions in terms of human rights violations, the language was ambiguous and the decree did not spell out precise criteria or concrete mechanisms for its application.

- On March 8, 2010, the IACHR condemned and lamented the murders of three persons who were active in the resistance to the coup d’état. The killings occurred between February and March of 2010. It also deplored the kidnappings, arbitrary detentions, sexual violations and illegal searches to which active members of the resistance to the coup d’état and members of their families had been subjected. The IACHR also expressed deep concern over the information received to the effect that children of activists were being threatened and harassed and in two cases had been killed.

- On March 5, 15 and 16 the IACHR’s Special Rapporteurship for Freedom of Expression condemned the murder of three journalists.

- Based on the information that the Commission received regarding the human rights situation in Honduras and with the purpose to follow up on the in loco visit made in August 2009 and the report titled Honduras: Human Rights and the Coup d’état, on March 19, 2010 the IACHR asked the Honduran State to agree to another visit by the Commission.

- On March 27, 2010, the IACHR’s Special Rapporteurship for Freedom of Expression condemned the murder of journalists from R.Z. Television Channel 4 and Radio Excélsior, Bayardo Mairena and Manuel Juárez, on March 26 in the Department of Olancho, Honduras. The Office of the Special Rapporteur expressed its deep concern over the vulnerability of the press in Honduras. On April 22, 2010, another press release was issued when it was learned that yet another journalist had been murdered on April 20, 2010.

- From May 15 to 18, 2010 The Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) visited Honduras, as a follow-up to the in loco visit it made in August 2009 and to the report titled Honduras: Human Rights and the Coup d’État. During the visit, the IACHR met with officials in the three branches of government: the Minister Special Commissioner for Human Rights; the Office of the Attorney General and the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Human Rights; the Vice Minister of Security and the Bureau of National Police; the Supreme Court of Justice; the officers of the National Congress and the Congressional Human Rights Commission; the Minister of Defense and the Head of the Joint Chiefs of Staff of the Armed Forces; and the Inter-institutional Human Rights Commission. It also met with human rights defenders, members of the media, representatives of civil society and members of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission.²

Human Rights Watch

- On December 20, 2010 Human Rights Watch released the report “After the Coup Ongoing Violence, Intimidation, and Impunity in Honduras”³. This 65-page report documents the state’s failure to ensure accountability for abuses committed under the country’s de facto government in 2009. The report also documents 47 cases of threats or attacks – including 18 killings – against journalists, human rights defenders, and political activists since the inauguration of President Porfirio Lobo in January 2010. This report is based on extensive interviews conducted during four Human Rights Watch visits to Honduras in October 2009, November-December 2009, and August 2010, as well as prior and subsequent interviews by phone and email.

Human Right Violations and Murders against LGTB People

Human rights violations affected with particular strength those sectors of the population that have historically been marginalized, discriminated and are the most vulnerable, such as children, the LGBT community, women and the indigenous and Garifuna peoples. Although there is no much information about LGTB people murdered before June 2009, due to the lack of reports regarding LGTB people human rights violations in Honduras, the report issued in March, 2009 by Human Rights Watch “Not Worth a Penny” reports that at least 17 travestis have been killed in public places in Honduras since 2004 to the date of the publication of the report by the beginning of 2009 (five years). Despite these records, the concerning increases in murders of LGBT people after of the June 2009 coup is alarming. Red Feminista Cattrachas, a local NGO that keeps a record of the murders over the period from June 2009 to January 2011, recorded 33 murders of LGBT people.

IGLHRC has been unable to obtain information on the status of the investigations in the majority of the cases. The information obtained, mainly by researching in on-line newspapers or contacting local activists, indicates that there has been little or no progress in investigations. Prosecutors have filed charges in only one case of murders and the alleged perpetrator was imprisoned on December 2009 where he escaped form few days after and was recaptured more than six months later. Failure to investigate crimes is common in Honduras, mainly because of limited resources, lack of independent investigators, lack of cooperation by security forces, etc. Also, prejudices within law enforcement agencies may lead to bias in police investigations of crimes against LGTB people. Investigative independence may also be at risk when it is supposed that the perpetrators are members of the police force or army, such as the case of Walter Trochez (case 18 listed below).

4 The Garinagu (singular Garifuna) are descendants of Carib, Arawak and West African people. The British colonial administration used the term Black Carib and Garinagu to distinguish them from Yellow and Red Carib, the Amerindian population that did not intermarry with Africans. The Amerindians who had not intermarried with Africans are still living in the Lesser Antilles; Dominica, St. Vincent and The Grenadines, etc. Today the Garifuna live primarily in Central America. They live along the Caribbean Coast in Belize, Guatemala, Nicaragua and Honduras including the mainland, and on the island of Roatán. There are also diaspora communities of Garinagu in the United States, particularly in Los Angeles, Miami, New York and other major cities.

With regard to patterns identified in these murders, it is difficult to find one common to them. In general, the murders of travestis, most of them practicing sex work, were committed by unidentified men in the streets, by shooting firearms from vehicles. With regard to gay men, mostly middle or high class or professionals, they were found in their apartments or cars, strangled or with sharp weapons wounds. In some cases police officers were able to verify the absence of objects of value, so they can assume that the motive was robbery, but the violence of the murders would also indicate a strong element of homophobia in these crimes. The murders of transvestites occurred in December 2010, are beyond the patterns that were maintained until then, in two of the incidents, the victims were set on fire either before or after their deaths.

After that he was transferred to the Hospital where he died. The work of Walter Tróchez, included dissemination of information about human rights in Honduras. As an LGBT activist, Tróchez also reported on the human rights of LGBT people during the coup, and advocated for HIV/AIDS prevention and combating religious fundamentalism. Tróchez faced significant abuse for his political and human rights activism and his sexual orientation, which escalated after the coup. On July 20, 2009, he was detained by authorities for participating in a peaceful, sit-down protest across from the Congress of the Republic. During his detention, he was brutally beaten and denigrated because of his sexual orientation but later released him. On December 4, unknown persons reportedly kidnapped and physically assaulted him. Trochez told human rights organizations that during his December 4 detention, the kidnappers questioned him about his involvement in the anticoup movement. He managed to escape and file a complaint to national and international authorities just days before he was murdered. He himself sent email attaching pictures of his beating body.</td>

<td>Known as Pino Nicolossi Women hairstylist. Owner of a beauty salon in San Pedro Sula and for many years was the stylist of several society ladies of that city. He was found dead inside his apartment. The body was half naked, had bruises produced with a blunt object and stab wounds in his abdomen and chest, including an alleged hammer blow to the head that probably caused his death. The victim was lying on his bed, where he had blood stains and on the floor was a hammer, which according to investigators would have been used by the perpetrator. When authorities arrived at the scene noted that his door was not forced, so determined that an acquaintance of the victim is responsible for the heinous crime. According to the victim’s adoptive son, Andy Saibe, his father lived alone and on Wednesday 18th, 2009, he tried to communicate with him, the lack of answer led to the apartment where he found bloodied and lifeless.</td>

the street was supposed to be expected for a suspect man. The victim's vehicle was missed, it was a Hyundai Matrix, 2007, blue, so it was presumed that its robbery would have to be linked to his death. Luis Gerardo Caceres, a friend of the deceased, said that since that Friday, he didn’t hear anything about the victim and that he called him repeatedly, but he did not answer his cell phone. This situation remained extremely concerned among their relatives and close friends, who went to the house, but did not see his car parked in the parking of the building; so they thought it was not there. On May 31st Caceres contacted Posse Herrera a victim cousin and together they went to his apartment to find out what was wrong, however, when they knocked on the door went unanswered. So they decided to open it with a key that the woman had and entered, finding a strong stench that was steeped in the whole atmosphere of the apartment. Caseres quickly went to the room Posse Herrera, finding him dead. He preferred to abstain from comment on what they saw at the crime scene.

The victim was a law graduate with a master's degree in international relations and served as cultural adviser to the Mayor's Office, since Miguel Pastor was the head of the commune.

Relevant Laws and Resolutions

In June 2008, Honduras supported a Resolution on Human Rights, Sexual Orientation, and Gender Identity unanimously adopted by the General Assembly of the Organization of American States (OAS). Honduras, with the rest of the OAS, expressed its concern over violence faced by people because of their sexual orientation or gender identity and made a public commitment to end it.

In June 2009, Honduras is hosting the 39th General Assembly of the OAS in San Pedro Sula under the theme “Toward a Culture of Non-Violence.” In the resolution AG/RES. 2504 (XXXIX-O/09) Human Rights, Sexual Orientation, and Gender Identity, the states... declare their commitment to condemn acts of violence and related human rights violations committed against individuals because of their sexual orientation and gender identity and to urge states to ensure that acts of violence and human rights violations committed against individuals because of their sexual orientation and gender identity are investigated and that their perpetrators are brought to justice.

Trangender People

The substantial power and discretion given to the police in provisions of the 2002 Law on Police and Social Affairs facilitate police abuse and arbitrary detentions of transgender people. All transgender individuals are at risk of police abuse and detention, whether they engage in sex work or not. Sex work is not itself illegal in Honduras, but legislation has created grey areas that police can use to arrest people they believe are “morally” dubious, and they often include transgender people in this area. Those engaged in sex work have a compound fear of being prosecuted on the grounds of both their identity and of their work. Meanwhile, article 321 of the Criminal Code, which affords general protections against discrimination, is rendered ineffective by stigma and by the neglect that surrounds violence against transgender people.

Law on Police and Social Affairs

According to article 5 of this law, enacted in 2001, police should “preven and eliminate disturbances to tranquility, public morality, and proper conduct.”15 Article 142 (3) of the law includes specific provisions that give power to the police power to arrest anyone who “exhibits total nudity or goes against modesty, proper conduct and public morals ... and disturbs the neighbors’ tranquility with their immoral conduct.” Article 99 of the law includes sanctions against particular groups of people—including “vagabonds,” defined as “people who have no honest known means of living; thus vagabonds include: street people, scoundrels, street prostitutes, drug addicts, drunkards, and gamblers.”

Obligation to Deter, Prevent, and Investigate Abuses

7 “Not Worth a Penny” Human Rights Watch, 2009
8 After the Coup Ongoing Violence, Intimidation, and Impunity in Honduras, Human Rights Watch 2010
Honduras is party to several international treaties that impose an obligation to respect, protect, and fulfill human rights listed in the treaties. Those same treaties also impose on the Honduran state the obligation to deter and prevent violations of those rights, to investigate and prosecute offenders, and to provide remedies to victims.

The obligation to deter and prevent is, in part, a corollary to the obligation to respect, protect, and fulfill the human rights, reflecting the view that effective protection and prevention require investigation and punishment. The IACHR, for example, has held that “the State has the obligation to use all the legal means at its disposal to combat [impunity], since impunity fosters chronic recidivism of human rights violations and total defenselessness of victims and their relatives.”

The duty to investigate and punish also derives from the right to a legal remedy that these treaties extend to victims of human rights violations. Under international law, governments have an obligation to provide victims of human rights abuses with an effective remedy, including justice, truth, and adequate reparations.

Under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR), governments have an obligation “to ensure that any person whose rights or freedoms as herein recognized are violated shall have an effective remedy.” The ICCPR imposes on states the duty to ensure that any person shall have their right to an effective remedy “determined by competent judicial, administrative or legislative authorities, or by any other competent authority provided for by the legal system of the State, and to develop the possibilities of judicial remedy.”
